Bringing Workplace Training Throughout Tompkins County

As sexual harassment cases in the workplace continue to rise nationwide, a Tompkins County organization is developing an anti-harassment training curriculum that can be used by local businesses and nonprofit organizations.

The Tompkins County Workers Center plans to offer a sexual harassment and workplace violence prevention training curriculum to local businesses and nonprofits beginning in 2019. The center decided to create the training because sexual harassment and violence has been the top request from employees over the past four years.

Last week, the center received its first grant to develop the training curriculum from the Women's Fund. The $3,500 grant will support the development of the curriculum and training of staff and volunteers who will offer it to businesses and nonprofits in the county.

The center received the grant just weeks after New York State began requiring all businesses with one employee or more to conduct annual anti-harassment training and to adopt written sexual harassment prevention policies. Under the law, employers in New York were required to adopt and distribute to employees written sexual harassment prevention policies by Oct. 9.

"We want to go above and beyond just developing a curriculum that's consistent with the basic safety standards or the minimum for the state," Brown said. "What we want to do with our curriculum is develop something that's robust, and that's more than the bare minimum."

The Tompkins County Workers Center is one of ten local nonprofits that received grants from Community Foundation's Women's Fund, which awarded more than $30,000 to local organizations this year.

2018 Women's Fund Grant Cycle Grantees

The Women's Fund was created in 2004 with a gift from Beverly Baker, a 1954 Ithaca College graduate who started her own travel agency, Baker Travel, and was involved in many community organizations.

Baker shares, "There are so many needs in our community. We who have a warm home in which to live and food to eat and good friends who rally when we need help, can't always understand what others face and have to deal with on a daily basis."
